

Mobility is at the core of livelihood. It involves how we choose to move from one place to another, including the routes, means and systems that are created for our movement, and the spaces we engage with.

This Conference focuses on our ability to act, participate and have an impact on the way we move.

In terms of mobility, what are the choices we are currently making? What factors are influencing our choices? Are there different, more desirable choices available to us? How can we influence each other and our environment to realise these desired choices? What can we do as individuals? How can we organise ourselves as collectives or networks to engage with decision-makers and have the impact we desire?
